

YOUR FULL REPORT

Which movie character type are you?

The loyal heart

Score band: 14–26 points · Just for fun

What this report covers

Your full character dossier as the loyal heart who gives the story its emotional stakes.

Inside:

1. The choices that revealed your role
2. Your signature scene
3. Why audiences root for you

→ Full details for each section on page 2

Your result

The loyal heart (14–26 points)

You are the emotional center—the person who keeps the group human when the plot gets messy.

Try this next

Movie fact: audiences remember the character who makes the stakes personal.

Your practical guide

Your full character dossier as the loyal heart who gives the story its emotional stakes.

1 The choices that revealed your role

The choices that revealed your role probably centered on loyalty: you picked the friend over the advantage, the team over the solo win, showing up over showing off. In scenario after scenario, your answers said the same thing — people matter more than plots. This is the moral center of every great story, and it is rarer in real life than in film: the person who actually calls, who remembers, who stands next to you in the hard scene instead of watching from the audience. The loyal heart is not the sidekick; they are the reason the hero's victory means anything. Without you, it is just plot. With you, it is a story.

2 Your signature scene

Your signature scene is the emotional core of the film: the hospital waiting room at 3am because you refused to leave. The "I am not going anywhere" delivered quietly while everyone else makes excuses. The moment you forgive the hero, or tell them the hard truth because you love them, or stand between them and the consequences. It is never the flashiest scene — it is the one the audience cries at. Think about your real life: you have already filmed this scene, probably more than once. The friend who calls you first in a crisis is telling you what role you play. Believe them.

3 Why audiences root for you

Audiences root for you because you represent what they wish they were: steadfast in a world of flakiness, brave in the unglamorous way, loving without a strategy. The loyal heart never has to be redeemed, never betrays for a plot twist, never learns the lesson too late — they knew it all along, and they lived it while everyone else was learning. That is why your character survives every sequel: stories need someone the audience can trust completely. In your own life, this means your consistency is your charisma. You do not need a dramatic arc. You are the ground the dramatic arcs stand on.